Markets send contradictory signals

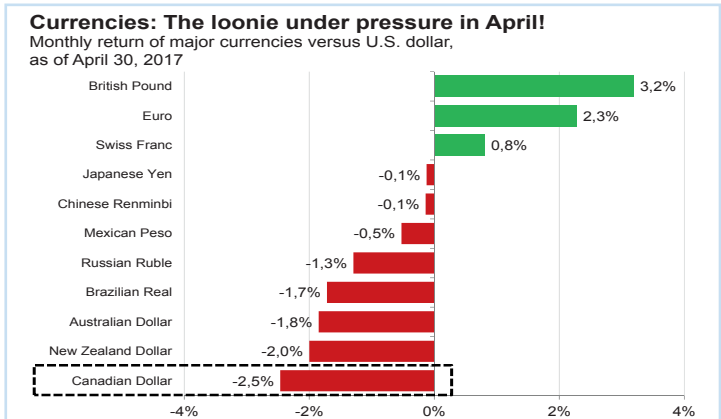

World

In Europe, the European Central Bank (ECB) left its key rate unchanged in April, but indicated that the risks of seeing another slowdown in the economy have diminished in the last few months. Indeed, the euro zone economy has held its own since the start of the year, and the pace of inflation has accelerated. However, the president of the ECB, Mario Draghi, would like to see a more sustained recovery of core inflation (which excludes the more volatile components such as gas prices) before considering a change of direction for the ultra-accommodating monetary policy established over the last few years.

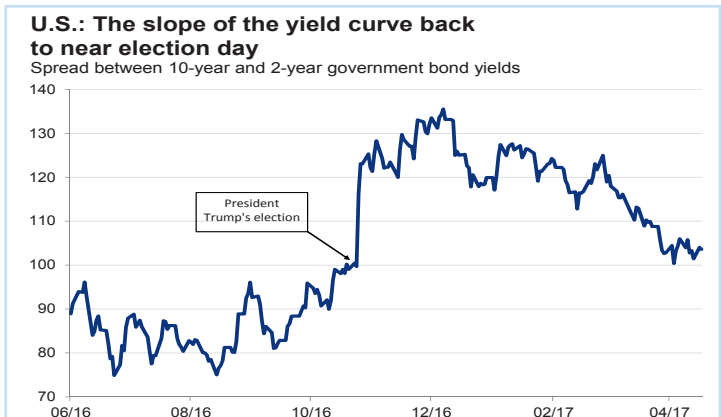

North America

The Canadian dollar faced pressure in April, declining 2.5% against the U.S. dollar. This performance caused the loonie to drop to the tail of the pack of the world's major currencies. Although the price of oil remained relatively stable in April and the Canadian economy is posting much stronger than anticipated growth in the first quarter, apprehension over a rougher-than-expected renegotiation of the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA) with Mr. Trump is mounting. Moreover, questions concerning the financial health of the Canadian real estate market continue to make headlines.

Financial markets

Since the start of the year, financial markets seem to be sending contradictory signals to investors. On the equity front, the U.S. market is brimming with optimism and continues to climb toward new heights, while displaying a historically low level of volatility. On the bond front, investors appear more skeptical of the Trump team's ability to stimulate the economy in a sustainable fashion, translating in part into lower rates and a flattening of the government bond yield curve.

NEWS

Changes to payroll deductions online

iA Financial Group is pleased to announce that we have added a new feature to My Client Space. Group retirement plan members can now change the amount or percentage of their employee contributions in My Client Space, as long as the plan sponsor makes this service available to them.

This feature meets the needs of our clients and their plan members who want to take advantage of digital tools and technologies. This innovation is one of iA Financial Group's many development initiatives.

Simplification of the plan sponsor's administrative tasks

- When a plan member makes a request to change his/her employee contributions, a visual indicator will appear on the plan sponsor's dashboard.

- The plan sponsor must process plan member change requests by changing their payroll deductions in its payroll system.
- Email notification is sent on Mondays if the plan sponsor has not processed all contribution changes requested online by plan members.
- Information regarding payroll deductions is available in plan members' files and in a report that can be produced upon request in My Client Space.

To add this service, plan sponsors must contact their Customer Relations Manager or Customer Service.
