Europe's economic situation is clearing up

World

The risks associated with the disintegration of the European Union seem to be dissipating with the convincing victory of Emmanuel Macron, who was elected as the president of France on May 14, 2017. This positive outcome comes on top of the positive surprises in economic data, which was recently reflected in a strengthened euro. It will be interesting to see whether this change in tone will influence the European Central Bank (ECB), which continues to promote maintaining accommodative monetary conditions to further stimulate inflation in the Eurozone.

North America

In May, the Organization of the Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) decided to extend its strategy to reduce production by nine months, to support the price of oil. Production has already seen a 6% reduction since November. However, this strategy seems unlikely, for now, to bear fruit due to the uptick in American oil production. The United States has access to major technological advances in the shale oil sector, which continuously reduces its production costs. This results in a veritable tug-of-war in the oil market, which translates into a barrel price with no clear direction.

Financial markets

Global stock markets have been performing well since the beginning of the year, in response to the synchronous recovery of prospects for economic growth and the strength of the technology sector. The Canadian market, however, is lagging behind with a return of almost 2%. Canada's exposure to a fragile oil industry, as well as continued uncertainty with respect to the real estate market and trading agreements with the United States seem to contribute to the negative sentiment of foreigners toward Canadian assets.
